HONGKONG, WEDNESDAY, JULY 2, 1890. THE Bill for the Protection of Women and further pleasure. But a very much Girls has passed through committee, and stronger objection to the force and validity we hope the last has been heard of this of this document might be taken than the matter for some time to come. Dr. Ho one raised by Mr Donne. The proclama-Kai secured an important amendment tion is addressed to the inhabitants of which recognises the legitimate marriages Hongkong at the time the island was taken. in an ordinance in favour of any custom is the operation of the Bill, that degrading custom, which is inimical to all healthy family life, would have received a status in the Colony which it has not hitherto pos. enter, ora a crusade against concubinage.

Administrator is unassailable. It is ulterly brothel keepers. There is a good deal of absurd these the Hougkong Government this in Hongkong, and if the Ordinauce to define what constitutes being duly mar. Jould not reach such blackguards its utility ried according to the laws and customs of would be destroyed. We are quite sure every Asiatic country. There is a great the Secretary of State would never accept difference of opinion as regards the social position of a Chinaman's second wife. Wa suppose exact definition of her position is impossible, because it varies according to the circumstances! Dr Williams, in his great work The Middle Kingdom, after describing the preliminaries and ceremonies attending a Chinese wedding, says : -- The Chinese do not marry another woman with these observances whilst the first one is liv. ing, but they may bring home concubined with no other formality than a contract with her parents, though it is considered somewhat discreditable for a man to take another bed-fellow if his wife have borne him sons, unless he can afford each of them a separate establishment. We suppose the main object of the Chinese law was to assure progeny, but the license being allowed for one purpose, it has gradually extended, until the practice has grown up of taking as many concubines, irrespective of a regard for family, as the means of the man can afford. Whether our law courts would hold that a Chinaman, under every or any circumstances, was duly married to his second wife according to the laws and customs of her native country is a doubtful point, but it is not a point that is HE greatest attention has been paid to likely to be raised under the new ordinance. We cannot conceive it possibl that the Hongkong authorities would institute a prosecution against a Chinaman, for 'marrying' a second wife under sixteen years of age, if the ceremony for second marriage was duly performed, and if the taking of a girl as second wife was not clearly shown to be a cloak for worse sins. Neither do we think that any of his countrymen for the purpose of blackmailing would risk the expense of protracted law case. The position of a third or fourth wife is perhaps somewhat more shaky, but if a Chinaman establishes a big harem in British Hongkong, he must be prepared, if he will have his concubines under 16 years of age, to run the small risk attached thereto. Dr. Ho Kai's attempt to obtain the open recognition of concubinage failed, as it certainly deserved to do, and we are satonished that the other unofficial members, belonging as they do to a civilised nation that holds such customs in abhorrence, should have given him the least support. They can only have done so because they did not see clearly the issues involved. And this, we think, is borne out by the attitude taken by Mr MacEwen. He had undoubtedly the best of the argument with Mr Deane. The proclamation of Capt. Elliot distinctly sets forth that the inhabitants are secured in the free exercise of their religious rites, ceremonies and social customs. There is no limitation whatever to this concession. N thing is said about its being conditional to Her Majesty's pleasure being made known. In the very next sentence of this proclamation, which states that the natives will be governed, according to the laws, customs and usages of the Chinese, by The publication of this issue commenced the elders of villages, there occurs the phrase 'pending Her Majesty's pleasure.' The natural and only inference is that the enjoyment of the religious rites, ceremonies and social customs is untrammelled. but that the government by the elders of villages is dependent on Her Majesty's of the Chinese and all other Asiatics, and No mention is made of future settlers, and having obtained this concession, he ought the whole tenour of the document shows to have been content. He was certainly that it applies solely to those living in the ill-advised in so persistently pressing for a island at the time, who were suddenly recognition of concubinage by the Legisla. brought under British rule. But the Bill in by any respectable Chinces citizen who question really makes no attack on Chinese | conforms to the approved customs of his customs. We shall continue to tolerate country is so infinitesimal that is impossible concubinage as of old. The amendment to find any just grounds for D. Ho Kai's introduced by the Attorney General does opposition. To have passed his amendaway completely with day hardship that ment, as it was first drafted, would have might have existed. In its final dress the hou. member's arrendment would not, we are freid, carrys him much farther than the Attorney General's, although he hoped it would cover concubinage to the fifth or with degree. The Government did wisely not to accept it, and the well-merited dethe unofficials saved the Colony from having the Ordinance thrown back with another severe reprimand from the Socretary of State.

Mr Wilkinson had argued that on the delivery of the godown delivery orders the contract was completed and that possession passed from the plaintiffs to defendants. He agreed with Mr Wilkinson on this point. The other point was as to damage, and on this he also agreed with Mr Wilkinson that the delay in informing the plaintiff had put the defendants out of Court. There would therefore be judgment for the plaintiffs, with costs.

June 23rd. THE FIGHTING IN EDIE. (Straits Independent, 18th June.) Our latest advices from Edic mention that since the battle fought on the 11th instant, the Dutch troops have continued their onward march and carried everything before them. On Saturday they crossed the Edie river to give battle to the Achinese in what has until now been considered their own territory, but the latter declined the engagement and il d. On Sunday they went as far as Edicjoot, about fifteen miles from Edie, and slept at the place, On their way there the troops killed every uce who resisted their advance and burned everything that was in their way. II N.M.'s gunbont Prince Hendrik der Nederlanden followed the troops along the const, and helled every position where resistance was likely to be offered. Un Monday othe Achinese tried to capture a lenting on the hill opposite Edie, but although the little fort was only garrisoned by about 6 1:100ps the enemy were repulsed with great loss, over 3 0 of their men remaining dead on the field. When our informant left Edie the Dutch were marching on Bagoah, with a view of capturing the Rajah of the place. This Ruigh is said to have been at the bottom, if he was not the actual instigator, of the late rising. It is to be hoped that with the vigour the Dutch are now displaying the fighting will soon come to an end, and that the country will be pacified and reopened to trade before long. When it was appropriated she hastened to lay hold on the Shan country, which is all mountainous. Culonhoun was closely watched by French agents. There were piles of reports at the Consular Department about his explorations, his scheme, and what business men in England trading with the Far East thought of it. They were very eager; Lord Granville was not I observed that the River was broken with catafacts. True. Novertheless, it is boing actually navigated by steamers of light draught up to the Great Cataract Grande Rapide), and thence by junks up to the Sinkay Cataract. To such a degree has the Red River been utilised by the Chinese as to be now their favourite way to their great cities on the coast. By taking it, instead of the Blue or Yellow River, when they wanted to go to Canton or Shanghai, they gained time and avoided a multitude of inland oustom-houses, each of which would exact tolls on them and their goods. A railway is soon to be made along the Red of difficulty. I saked where the capital to male it was to come from. The coal beds along the coasts of Armam and of Tonquia were inconceivably rich, and however actively worked were good for a couple of thousand years, according to geological experts. Pala's Mino was an old one, but the poor coal only had been worked off by the Annamires. Alter speaking in a tone of quiet conviction about the agricultural riches of I the Tonquin mountains, M. Ferry spoke of the cheapness of labour as being favourable to I uropean enterprise. Between it and good credit at Hong Kong, Tonquin ere long would be a mainstay of France. There were now under France in the Far East 20.0: 0,000 of dooile, patient people with kilful hands.
